Dining

The restaurant is named Marmælen. According to the tradition of northern Norway, the Marmæl (from Old Norwegian "marmennil," a compound of "mar" = "sea" and "mannil" = "little man") is a small, human-like creature living in the ocean.

The "marmennil" is said to be naked and shivering cold when caught, and any wise fisherman would clothe it with woolen mittens or the like before releasing it. A well-treated Marmæl would later reward the fisherman by providing advice on where to fish or avoid bad weather. It is evident why this little spirit would be held in high regard! For them, the name evokes their fishing-related past.

In the restaurant, they can accommodate up to 150 people. During the summer season, breakfast and dinner are served. If you wish to book for a family celebration, they can offer separate sections of the restaurant based on the size of your group.
